RISK ON MOVE CONTINUES...

On March 10th 2000, the Nasdaq closed at an all-time high of 5,048.62. It has not seen that level for almost fifteen years now. Looking back we can now fairly say that the Index had built-in fifteen years of excess valuation. We have been working off that excess value ever since. Now we are finally closing in on a new all-time high that many thought that we would never see again.

On Friday, the Nasdaq closed at 4,955, just 93 points away from it's all time high.

What caused such extreme valuation back then? Those were the days when dot.com IPO's ruled, and investors would do almost anything to get in on the next one. It mattered not what the company did, or how much investors were paying for little things like sales and earnings.

Just how overpriced were these dot.coms? On October 9, 2002, the Nasdaq closed at 1114.11. In just under three years, it had lost 77.9% of its value. This was not the first bubble to burst, nor will it be the last.

I was there during the dot.com bubble. I was in the business. Very few of those folks are in the business today. The lesson that I came away with is that VALUATION DOES MATTER! That is why, nearly one-half of my Best Stocks Now™ formula is value.

Will the Nasdaq finally hit a new all-time high? Nobody knows for sure, but as you can see from the chart below, it is sure headed in that direction right now. It has been a long, tough fifteen year slog, but now fifteen year later, we are almost there.

In the following pages you are going to see many new all-time highs being made right now. I pointed out the beginning of a big risk-on move last week, and it continues to gather steam.

I can still remember how red-hot the semiconductor stocks were back in 2000. We were told that the new information super highway would be paved with chips, and lots of them. The semiconductor stocks sure took a big fall when the bubble burst. Now the group is hitting a new all-time high once again!

Investors don't usually pour into semiconductor stocks when they are worried about the economy. They buy them when they have confidence that current economic growth and the bull market can continue. This is our first bit of evidence that the risk-on move continues.

Now let's look at a few individual semiconductor stocks. MPWR is breaking just now breaking out. I bought the stock on Friday.

I remember Analog Devices during the dot.com era. It has been a survivor. It too is breaking out.

Another chip stock, Integrated Device Technology (IDTI) is also breaking out.

A major user of chips, Apple Inc. just passed $700 billion in market capitalization. I think that it would be fair to say that AAPL is one of the generals leading the current surge in the tech sector. Apple's fundamentals are quite a bit more solid than TheGlobe.com! During the Dot.com bubble, TheGlobe.com went from $63.50 to $0.16. ☹

The Biotech Sector is also not exactly a recipient of "safe money." It too is a very good "risk-on" indicator. As you can see, it is hitting new, all-time highs. I remain long this ETF.

And a lot of individual biotech stocks are also breaking out to new all-time highs. Biogen continues to make a very powerful move.

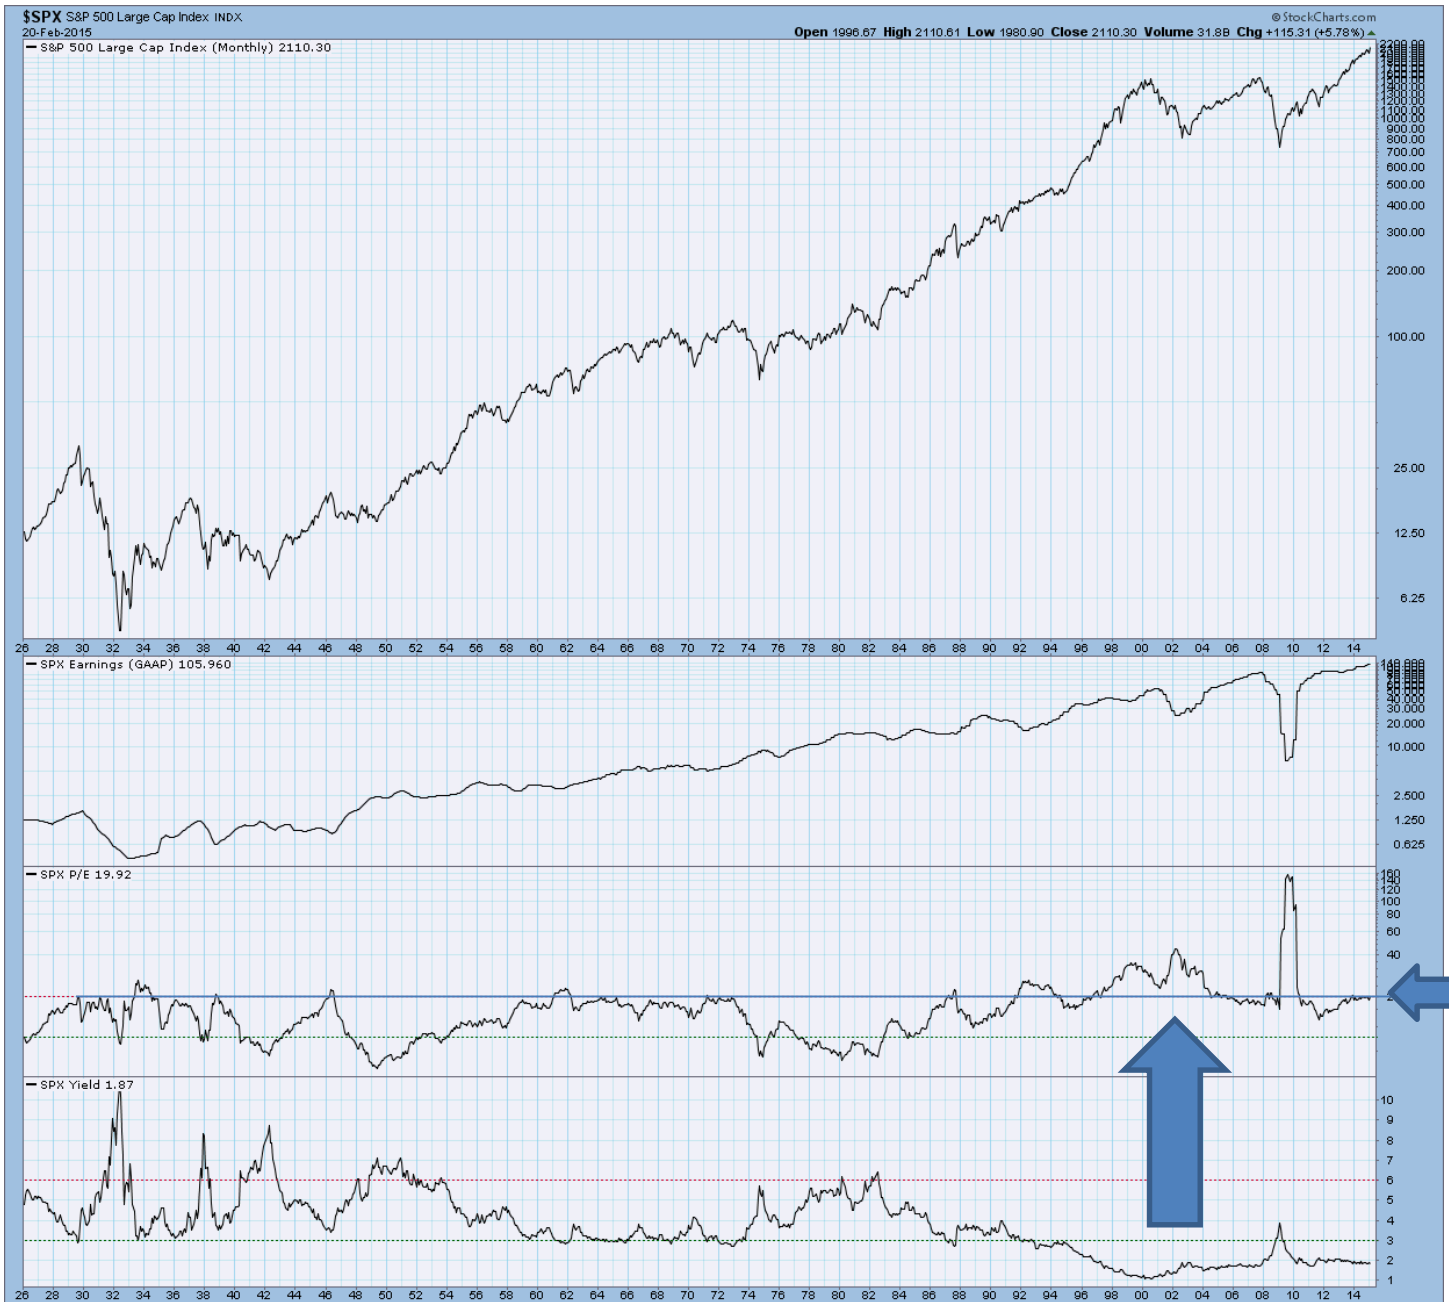

Biomarin is also a good proxy for the red-hot sector. I own it too.

The Software sector, another risk-on proxy, is also breaking out.

By now, you are probably thinking, “are we entering into another bubble?” Let's have a look at some facts. Here is a historic look at the average PE ratio of the S&P 500 (screen #3).

As you can see from the chart above, the PE ratio of the S&P 500 got up to 42X back in the year 2000. Right now we are trading at 19.92X. Although the S&P traded above 20X for about 12 years (1992-2004), 20X has been fairly stiff resistance over the long haul. And while it can easily continue to go higher, we are entering into “fair valuation” territory.

It should also be remembered that it is a market of stocks, however. You still have to analyze valuation issues one stock at a time.

What about the Nasdaq?

The current PE ratio of the Nasdaq is 21.33. We are approaching a new five year high, but in no way are we entering into bubble territory.

As you can see in the chart below, the Nasdaq was trading well above 100X before the big crash, and it has traded much higher over the last ten years. It too is hitting a resistance level that has been fairly stiff resistance for the last five years, however.

Here is how we finished a record-setting week.

Top 10 (This week)

It should not come as any surprise that the Nasdaq is now my top ranked asset class. This is one of the most risk-on asset-classes in my database. U.S. Mid-Caps, and U.S. Small-Caps are also very much risk on. This week, ten of the top ten asset classes are all U.S. stock related.

Here are this week's worst ranked asset classes. Avoid these neighborhoods.

The S&P 500 Inverse index is still the worst place to be. Gold and Silver tried to rally earlier this year, but once again the rally fizzled out. Emerging Markets have reversed course from down to up, but there are still a lot better places to be invested.

Here is this week's all-important ranking of the 77 indexes that I track on a daily basis: GRADING LEGEND

The move in the China "A" shares has cooled off for now, but it had been red-hot earlier.

The European small-cap index definitely has my interest right now. With Greece on the back burner right now, it may have clear sailing for a while.

It should be noted the PE ratio of Europe is just 13.8 right now.

Japan is also breaking out as it prints money also.

Here are this week's ten bottom ranked indexes. These are the ones to avoid.

Everyone has different choices to them in their 401-ks. The choices basically fall into several broad categories however: Large Cap, Mid-Cap, Small-Cap, Govt. Bond, Corp. Bond, Inflation Protected Bond, International, Emerging Market, and maybe sectors like technology, natural resources, etc.

I have added a number of mutual funds to my Best Stocks Now database that are representative of the various categories of funds that are available in most 401k plans. I grade them on a daily basis.

If you have a wide selection of mutual funds in your plan, here is my current recommendation. This portfolio is also off to a very good start in 2015. It is up 7.24% YTD and up 40.00% since it Jan. 1, 2013 (net of all fees and trading costs).
